Chapter 117: The Emissaries’ Singular Focus

Unlike the original bodies, first clones, and second clones, the emissaries created by the third, fourth, and fifth clones—Nyxion, Aurelith, Umbrosar, Virelith, Obscuras, and Ignirion—chose not to create additional inner worlds.

This decision was not due to a lack of ability but rather a deliberate choice. The emissaries believed their primary purpose was to nurture and perfect the realms they had been assigned, ensuring their worlds became unparalleled centers of power and influence in the multiverse.

Reasons Behind Their Decision

1. Dedication to Assigned Worlds

The emissaries recognized the immense complexity and potential of the inner worlds they were entrusted with. Rather than dispersing their energy and focus by creating new realms, they committed themselves fully to cultivating the unique strengths of their existing domains.

2. Maximizing Efficiency

By focusing on a single world, the emissaries could direct all their resources, time, and creativity toward its growth. This approach allowed them to develop their realms into self-sufficient powerhouses capable of supporting the Divine Triad’s greater multiversal ambitions.

3. Unity with Their Clones’ Intent

The third, fourth, and fifth clones had each created their inner worlds with a specific vision in mind. The emissaries sought to honor and amplify this vision, ensuring their realms aligned perfectly with the overall strategy and goals of their creators.

Impact of Their Focus

1. Unparalleled Development
The emissaries' dedicated efforts resulted in their inner worlds achieving a level of development and stability that far surpassed expectations. Armies, societies, and resources within these realms grew with precision and purpose.

2. Strategic Strength
By refining and perfecting their assigned worlds, the emissaries ensured these realms became formidable strongholds, each capable of influencing the multiverse’s balance of power.

3. Legacy of Mastery
The choice to focus solely on their assigned worlds demonstrated the emissaries’ wisdom and loyalty, solidifying their roles as indispensable figures within the Divine Triad’s hierarchy.

Though they possessed the power to create new realms, Nyxion, Aurelith, Umbrosar, Virelith, Obscuras, and Ignirion proved that true strength lay in the mastery of what was already entrusted to them. Their unwavering dedication ensured that their worlds would stand as enduring pillars of the Divine Triad’s supremacy across the multiverse.